Sherman's action in capturing the convention and shaping it in his own interest was one of the mos shameless and humiliating spectacles ever witnessed in American politicsmore like the manipulation of a scheming ward politician than the deliberate conduct of a so-called statesman, seeking the highest and most henorable station on earth. For once I am willing to hold up this Blaine man as a true exponent of Democratic opinion on the subject under the consideration, so I will drop the matter right here. TLES OF VICKSBURG

Perhaps there is no place in the city at present where an hour can be spent more profitably than at the Panorama of the land and Naval Battles of Vicksburg, the fame of which has spread all over this great country. From early morning until nearly midnight, visitors go and linger as they gaze at the landscape spread outbefore them, and then examine the details of the "battle's magnificently stern array," portrayed with marvelous fidelity and startling real. The proprietors of this grand work of art have an established reputation in this country by several famous panoramas they have exhibited. They are owners of the original and only true Panorama of the Battle of Gettysburg now in Chicago, and also of the famous picture of the Battle of Waterloo, realize the tremendous task of compil- which has been on exhibition for over ing and publishing the war papers known as the "Rebellion Records," Vicksburg is on exhibition now.

The Waterloo and Vicksburg Panoramas have been viewed by over two million of visitors, and Vicksburg, which has been on exhibition nearly two years in New York, excels them all; no other Panorama presents such sweep of country, and no other presents nature arrayed in the grab of summer, with the summer sun producing the innumerables tints and the light and shade, that lend to the scene a charm that is wanting in other paintings of this kind .- And what a scene year amount to $118,835,757 exceedit is to be sure! The distant bills covered with forests, ripened grain ready for the sickle, highways and houses which have been happy homes; the beautiful Mississippi river with its many gunboats and mortars, and the contending hosts of gallant men struggling for victory; the artillery which can be almost heard thunder, the masses of infantry, the hand to hand encounters, the dying and the dead, and all the horrors of war are before the spectator.-It is not surprising that the scene fascinates! that the people go again and again to see the Company's exhibits, and that, although some have viewed this grand work several times, the cry is "still they come." The poet Keats wrote: "A thing of beauty is a joy forever;
